Biogeosciences Discuss., 11, C4432-C4433, 2015 www.biogeosciences-discuss.net/11/C4432/2015/ © Author(s) 2015. This work is distributed under the Creative Commons Attribute 3.0 License.

Interactive comment on "Using O₂ to study the relationships between soil CO2 efflux and soil respiration" by A. Angert et al.

S. Hall

steven.j.hall@utah.edu

Received and published: 18 February 2015

This is a very interesting and important study. I agree that Fe redox cycling could be part of the explanation for your finding of systematically low RQ in acidic soils. It might be useful to include a brief discussion of the magnitudes of Fe reduction and oxidation that would be necessary to explain the observed deviations in RQ from predicted values, and whether these are realistic in light of observed patterns of Fe reduction/oxidation in terrestrial soils. There have been some recent published estimates best regards Steven Hall

could provide important context for your work.
of soil Fe(II) concentrations and net rates of reduction/oxidation in terrestrial soils to tion/oxidation in terrestrial soils. There have been some recent published estime

C4432

Interactive comment on Biogeosciences Discuss., 11, 12039, 2014.