

Interactive comment on “Alkenone isotopes show evidence of active carbon concentrating mechanisms in coccolithophores as aqueous carbon dioxide concentrations fall below $7 \mu\text{mol L}^{-1}$ ” by Marcus P. S. Badger

Marcus P. S. Badger

marcus.badger@open.ac.uk

Received and published: 3 December 2020

Many thanks to the reviewer for their kind word on the manuscript and constructive comments and suggestions. I am happy to make all the minor revisions suggested in a revised manuscript. In common with the other reviewer, this reviewer suggests a need for enhanced introductory and discussion text about CCMs and I am happy to make these additions in a revised manuscript.

The results of Van de Waal et al (2019) are certainly intriguing, but it is difficult to be sure how these results apply to much of the interval of my study, as the most relevant haptophyte studied, Emiliana huxleyii, is a relatively recent species and has evolved (and in particular become dominant) within the relatively low CO₂ conditions of the Pleistocene.

C1

Interactive comment on Biogeosciences Discuss., <https://doi.org/10.5194/bg-2020-356>, 2020.

C2